Key Insights to Remember

- Keep yourself in mind—don't spread yourself too thin trying to tailor-make each child's education, especially in the younger years when they already need more individual attention. There will be time for more customization later.
- There is not a cookie-cutter answer for everyone—do what works for your family.
- Especially before middle school, bundle kids together for everything but math, reading, and writing.
- With the proper training and foundation in place, your middle school students are more ready to be independent learners, so their education can be customized much more to fit their God-given abilities and interests!
